LATEST TRENDS

Currency and supply influences are reflected in various European import prices movements as reported by correspondents this month. The recent decline in the value of the US dollar is reflected in lower euro prices for a range of dollar denominated products particularly in the frozen groundfish and shrimp segments. Stronger European (herring) and Asian (mackerel) supplies are reflected in weaker frozen pelagic prices this season. In contrast, prices for several chilled farmed fish products, including salmon and turbot, are above or on a par with levels reported in April 2006 while frozen tuna prices remain high due to continued supply weaknesses.

GROUNDFISH

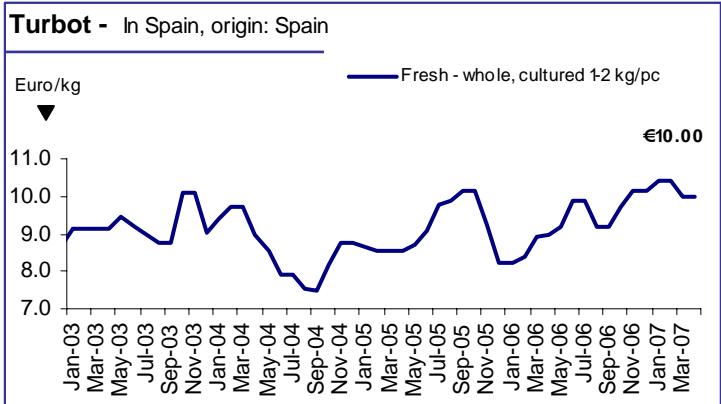

Indications in US dollar terms for Alaska pollock and South American hake fillets are unchanged on March levels. The dollar weakness over the past month means, however, lower prices in euro terms. Euro prices for US frozen-at-sea skinless boneless Alaska pollock blocks are down 2% on March to just below €2.20/kg while a euro conversion price for pinbone-in blocks is at its lowest level, below the €2/kg mark, for over two years. Euro prices for M. hubbsi fillets are also relatively low compared to 2006 levels.

Euro import prices for frozen Atlantic cod and saithe fillets are stable although the annual trend is mixed with an indication for cod fillets 11% higher compared to April 2006 while there is a 5% decline for saithe fillets over the same period. These trends are broadly consistent with first quarter Norwegian export unit value figures (Nok/kg) which show a 30% increase for frozen cod fillets and a 5% decline for saithe fillets compared to the January-March period in 2006.

FLATFISH

Following a seasonal firming in demand, and prices, for Easter, cif (Spain) prices for farmed turbot were expected to ease during the latter half of April with average prices for the month largely in line with those for March. The start of the wild turbot season at the end of the month should mean increased price competition going into May. Current prices, particularly for the larger grades of farmed turbot, remain well above corresponding levels for April 2006.

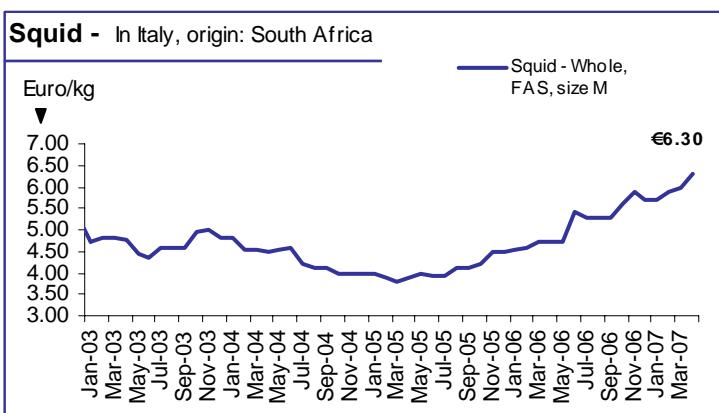

TUNA

Landings continue to be disappointing in all oceans. Yellowfin 10 kg/up (origin: South East Asia) was sold in the Spanish market at EUR1800/tonne deq. Prices of loins in Italy are still growing, as Italian canners would keep on buying yellowfin at unusually high prices, such as US$6200/tonne cfr (double-cleaned, origin: Indian Ocean) rather than switching to cheaper skipjack. Instead, Spanish canners seem to be well supplied with both yellowfin and skipjack, at least until the week before Easter. In general, sales of loins from dutiable sources increased as duty-free supplies from countries covered by EU preferential treatment could not meet demand. Some of these dutiable loins, in particular those from South East Asian producers, may be held in bond until 1st July which is the official start of the EU 6 percent duty quota. Prices are expected to increase further due to higher demand of canned tuna in the summer months and projected low landings in important fishing grounds, such as the Indian Ocean.

PELAGICS

In a changed supply context, current pelagic prices remain below the relatively high levels of 2005/2006. Stronger herring landings in Norway are reflected in a 53% increase in Norwegian exports of frozen round product during the January-March period this year compared to the first quarter of 2006. Average unit values for these exports are down 24%, to NOK4.17/kg, compared to last year. Similarly, unit values for Norwegian round mackerel exports are down almost 20%, to NOK10.41/kg, for the first quarter compared to the same period in 2006. Although European mackerel landings for the 2006/2007 season are likely to have been below the level for the previous season, increased mackerel landings in Japan have dampened import demand in that market during the current season.

CEPHALOPODS

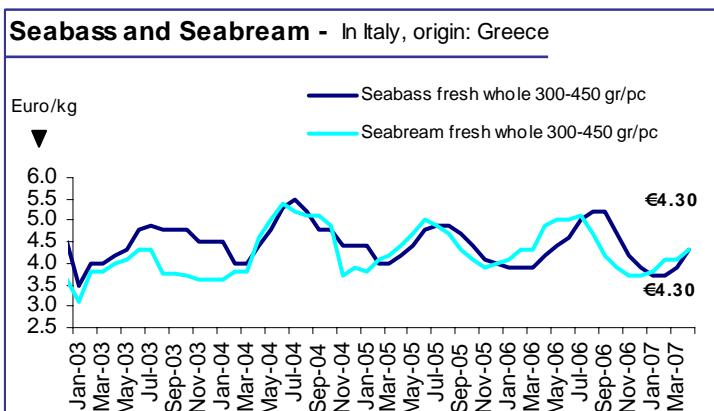

Delivered prices to the Italian market for frozen-at-sea South African loligo squid remain high due to continued weak landings. Current price indications are around 30% higher compared to prices reported for April 2006.

CRUSTACEANS

Import price trends for frozen shrimp appear broadly stable to decreasing with a report from Indonesia suggesting weaker prices for farmed shrimp on stronger supplies. In Germany, price indications for black tiger shrimp are generally stable compared to March with slight increases reported for certain grades. In the coldwater segment, UK prices for cooked and peeled shrimp appear stable while a firming of prices for cooked shell-on product is reported due to weaker supplies. The combination of high fuel costs and low prices continues to impact fishing for coldwater shrimp with Norwegian landings down around 70% this year.

SEABASS/SEABREAM

Price indications for all grades of seabass and most seabream grades are higher this month in line with seasonal trends. For the Italian market, delivered seabass prices (from Greece) are up between 4 and 14% compared to March levels with the strongest increases for grades in the 300-600gr range. Increases in prices for Greek seabream delivered to Italy are somewhat lower with the biggest increases, around 6%, in the 600-1000gr range. The positive price trend for both product categories is expected to continue for several months until the arrival of new generation fish.
